

SPECIALIST TRAINING IN SINGAPORE

Dear Editor,

I would like to state clearly that the views I expressed in my previous letter (SMA News 2005; 37:(10):20-21) about the state of internal medicine BST training, are entirely my own. The people I alluded to in the article have nothing to do with my letter and do not even know who I am.

I was compelled to write my letter as I have seen enough colleagues and friends who have been held back in their careers because they became BST trainees while their non-trainee colleagues forged ahead. And also, till this day, apart from the assurance of not getting a completely irrelevant MO posting, the benefits of being an internal medicine BST trainee remain a mystery to me.

Yours with all sincerity,

Don't-persecute-your-own-please Doctor ■
