Over the years, Dr Tham has been involved in organising and personally participating in community-assisting and building programmes within and outside Singapore. Through his vast experience, he has witnessed successes and failures, as well as less than ideal outcomes and bad aftertastes. This book expresses Dr Tham's philosophy behind his efforts, and more importantly, acts as a guide for individuals and parties who are considering voluntary work within or outside Singapore. It touches upon the intricacies and potential pitfalls involved with such work and how they may be approached in the appropriate manner. Furthermore, no matter how big or small the project, it has to be done well. Otherwise, repercussions will fall upon the organiser, the organisation and future efforts. SMA
